Team	Alon Goren (CEO), Eli Attar (COO, VP of R&D), Yirmi Hauptman (CTO), Pini Sabach (CCO & CSO)

Description of product:

A software system for detecting irregular heart rates by monitoring the voice track of smart phone, landline or voice assistant devices. The product allows business collaboration with providers of communication services and with remote health services.

Project goal:

Facilitation of AF clinical studies and regulatory approvals.

Project type:

Charité is especially suitable for our innovation because of the focus on cardiovascular diseases and the extensive research in this field. The Center for Stroke Research Berlin (CSB) at the Charité has an Integrated Research and Treatment Center (IFB), and research groups that perform disease-oriented clinical research, epidemiology and health services research related to stroke. We believe that our innovation will play a major role in significantly reducing the number of strokes by detecting asymptomatic AF patients and AF burdens. The CSB also has established internal structures to further research and improve research conditions and support clinical studies. In addition, the Charité center for telemonitoring could serve as the internal center for VAAM operation. Cardiokol is also interested in establishing strong presence in Germany, and collaboration with Charité could be an excellent fit where Cardiokol could pilot its products and establish collaboration with members of the clinical research teams. Additionally, the Charité offering for collaborative engagements matches our need; in-kind services that include expertise and/or use of their extensive facilities including beta-site operations, access to real-field conditions, usage of internal services, access to unique data and data sets, regulatory guidance and the possibility to recruit patients. We also envision facilitation in commercializing our product in Europe through joint work with relevant local business partners (companies, investors, distributors, etc.) that are part of the Charité network.
